During the penultimate week of November 2016, Faculty of Arts in Szeged, Hungary, hosted an international conference dedicated to the Medieval History of the Eurasian Steppe. This traditional event was organized sixth time in a row since 2003 by MTA-SZTE (“Hungarian Academy of Sciences – University of Szeged”) Turkological Research group of the departments of Altaic and Medieval Studies at the Faculty of Arts, University of Szeged, led by professors Mária Ivanics and István Zimony. More than thirty scholars from Hungary, Russia, Turkey, China, Spain, Bulgaria and Serbia took part in this event. The program was divided into eleven sessions, all of them followed by well prepared presentations and lengthy and fruitful discussions. The working languages of the conference were English and Russian.

Presented papers dealt with various aspects of the history of Eurasian nomads, from the Early Middle Ages up to the seventeenth century. Among them were those dedicated to the internal organization and political transformations of Eurasian peoples (Isenbike Togan, Changes in titulature and westward migration: the case of the Qarluqs; Nikolay Kradin, The Urbanization of Liao and Yuan empires in the Mongolian steppes; Hao Chen, Transformation of the concept ‘toquz oghuz’ in medieval Eurasia), military history (Mutlu Kahraman, Warfare of Turk Khanate), oral and written traditions (Balázs Danka, An epical geography of the Oğuz-nâmâ in Uygur script; Tatyana Anikeeva, Nomads in prose medieval Turkish folklore – Battal-name and Danishmend-name geography), diplomacy (Mehmet Tezcan, In which group are the Orkhon inscriptions classified in terms of diplomacy) and trade (Mátyás Balogh, On the emergence of the Qinghai sections of the Silk Road).

Three papers were focused on the contacts between Eastern Slavs and Turkic peoples in pre-Mongol Era (Марта Фонт, Южная Русь и ее соседи в 12–13 вв. в свете генеалогии; Csete Katona, Merge of cultures: steppe nomadic traits in Rus rituals; Vladimir Petrukhin, The title khagan in Old Slavic traditions), while four dealt with various aspects of the history of the Mongol Empire (Miklós Sárközy, Mongol–Nizārī Ismaili relations in Northern Iran before 1256 – new sources and results; Márton Vér, An Old Uyghur register and the different levels of administration of the Mongol Empire’s postal system; Ishayahu Landa, Reconsidering the Chinggisids’ son-in-laws: Lessons from the United Empire; Xiaolin Ma, The Eleven Queens’ Ordoes and Imperial Ancestral Sacrifice under the Mongol- Yuan Dynasty: from steppe to North China). Issues of power and authority in Post-Chingissid states were the subject of the two presentations that attracted wide attention of the participants (Alexander Vasilyev, The Ottoman document on the hierarchy of power in the dynasties of Shaibanids and Timurids according to the traditions of nomadic law; Татьяна Скрынникова, Символы власти в Монголии XVII в. по материалам летописи Erdeni Utumal neretü sudur).

Last but not least, four papers presented at the conference were related to the history of the Golden Horde. Two Hungarian scholars affiliated with host institution provided insightful papers dealing with different groups of sources important for the Juchid history. Szilvia Kovács discussed activities of a Franciscan missionary, Hungarian friar Stephen, who was murdered in Sarai in 1334, providing in addition general overview of the minorite activities at the beginning of the fourteenth century (Sz. Kovács, An unremembered Hungarian Friar’s martyrdom in the Golden Horde), while Csaba Göncöl analyzed place of the eponymous forefather of the clan Širin in the work of famous eighteenth century writer Qirim (Cs. Göncöl, Rüktemür Beg in the Chronicle of ‘Abdu l-Gaffār Qirim). Bulgarian historian Konstantin Golev discussed some aspects of the Battle of Kalka river (1223) and offered new hypotheses related to the accounts presented in the Russian chronicles and internal dissensions between the Russian and the Cuman camp on the eve of the battle (K. Golev, The Battle of the Kalka River – a tentative reconstruction). Finally, the author of these words presented his paper focused on the ethnic and religious conditions in the western lands of the Golden Horde in the late thirteenth century, on the basis of Western, Slavic, Byzantine and Oriental Sources (A. Uzelac, An Empire within an Empire? – Ethnic, Religious and Demographic Realities in the Ulus of Nogai).

Invited by the organizers, participants of the conference visited Ferenc Móra Museum in Szeged on November 26. Particular interest was shown to the museum’s permanent exhibition of the golden artefacts, including the collection from the Age of the Huns.

The proceedings of the conference are planned to be published in 2017, as a separate volume of the journal Chronica – Annual of The Institute of History, University of Szeged. Considering the quality and variety of the papers, presented at this occasion, there is no doubt that it will attract the attention of the growing community of researchers and scholars interested in the medieval history of Eurasia.

Шестая международная конференция, посвященная средневековой истории Евразийских степей была проведена в венгерском городе Сегед 23–26 ноября 2016 г. Организатором этого мероприятия стала MTA-SZTE («Венгерская академия наук – Университет Сегед») Тюркологическая исследовательская группа отдела алтаистики и медевистики Факультета искусств Сегедского университета. На конференции приняли участие более тридцати ученых из Венгрии, России, Турции, Китая, Испании, Болгарии и Сербии. Официальными языками конференции были английский и русский. Представленные доклады рассматривали различные аспекты истории и археологии кочевников от раннего средневековья до семнадцатого века. В том числе несколько докладов были связаны с историей, источниковедением и обществом Золотой Орды. Материалы конференции будут опубликованы в отдельном выпуске журнала Chronica – Annual of The Institute of History, University of Szeged. Учитывая качество и разнообразие представленных докладов, нет сомнений в том, что эта публикация привлечет внимание растущего сообщества исследователей и ученых, занимающихся средневековой историей Евразии.
